BIOGRAPHY

Born and raised in Scarborough, Swabir Shariff grew up in Toronto Community Housing. He watched the people around him — friends, and his own brother — get pulled toward the justice system, while the services meant to help them never reached them: young people could not see themselves in those organizations, had no mentors, and were handed solutions designed by outsiders. So they disengaged entirely.

His executive career came first. As a Director of Security in Scarborough, leading round-the-clock (24/7) operations for a major retail centre, he watched young people drift through his corridors every day, skipping school, and started informal hangouts with them, right there. The Good Guides grew out of those conversations: founded in 2020, while he was still in the role, and built as a youth-led mentoring organization — services designed with young people holding the keys, not prescribed at them. He later stepped away from that career to lead it full time.

Its work spans mentorship, youth leadership, violence prevention, sports and co-op placements. Since 2020, The Good Guides has mentored 10,000+ young people aged 11–18 across Toronto, and Swabir has helped direct over a million dollars in investment into The Good Guides and other Scarborough youth initiatives. In October 2026, that work carried him to London: selected as one of the QECT 100 Young Leaders, he presented at Asprey in London, and was received at St James's Palace.

> "The services didn't fail because people didn't care. They failed because the young people they were built for couldn't see themselves in them. So we built something they could."
